Stay-at-home Mum

Fiona Gilbert is married with three teenage sons. Her husband gets up early every morning and goes to work by train. He works in a bank in the centre of London. The boys leave for school at 8am and Fiona puts away the breakfast things and turns on the dishwasher. Fiona goes to work at about nine o'clock, but she doesn't travel very far. Her office is in the spare bedroom in the house. That's because Fiona is one of the 3.7 million people in the UK who work but don't go out to work. They are homeworkers.

Fiona is a freelance writer and a finance expert. Every week she writes articles for magazines and newspapers. She describes how people can save money. Occasionally, she appears on TV too. Fiona really enjoys her job. She says that the best thing about it is when it's warm and sunny. She doesn't stay at her desk. She takes her laptop into the garden and works outside. It isn't all good though. Fiona sends and receives a lot of emails every day, but sometimes she doesn't speak to anyone all day. She hates that.

Fiona turns off her laptop when the boys come back from school. They sit down together and chat about their day at school. Fiona becomes a mother again then, and starts making dinner for her family.
